This is a quilt that I made for my brother. It is Bonnie Hunter’s pattern called Smith Mountain Morning. I did adapt it and made piano key borders whereas her original pattern has triangles. I didn’t have enough scraps to make a scrappy one so I used a batik collection called Rockport from Timeless Treasures. At the end, members of the Hof guild had a show and share of her quilt patterns we had made there. We were taking a lot of photos. So sit back and relax and enjoy the show. Bentley and machine quilted by Pam Romine. I participated in the Bonnie Hunter workshop sponsored by Stitch by Stitch Quilt Guild. This is one of my favorite quilts. Doctors visits, medical tests, husband's surgery, and a two week long cold have all conspired to keep me from updating. I have managed to get a bit of quilting done. Smith Mountain is a pattern by Bonnie Hunter. I made the top in July 2014. This was a great quilt to piece, and I enjoyed quilting it as well. This beautiful pattern called Flurry was designed by Colette Belt. I purchased the pattern and fabric from an amazing little shop in Franklin, TN, the Quilting Squares quilt shop. It was definitely worth the short drive from Nashville. If you ever visit the area, friendly staff with unique fabric and kits, Quiltville Smith Mountain Pattern, Quiltville Smith Mountain Pattern visit, discover ideas about flag quilt. Visit, discover ideas about flag quilt. My Smith Mountain Morning quilt top is finally done. My motivation got lost somewhere in the middle of all those border pieces. Actually, I think it was the strip that fits between the top and the border after sewing on the 2 inner borders. That was called for. I just could not get my pieced sections to fit. Judy L at Patchwork Times is hosting the 2019 UFO Challenge. I did remarkably well in 2018. I finished 8 and moved forward on 2 others. So I am going to continue my UFO busting in 2019. It's always a bit intimidating for me when I start listing my UFOs. I have a lot of them, so I just started making a list until I had more than 12 to choose from.
