If you are sisterless you do not have the pressure the absolute responsibility to end the day alive. Isabella Leitner’s eloquent declaration provides a clue for contemporary scholars who undertake a gendered study of the Holocaust.

The many powerful accounts of the Holocaust have given rise to women’s voices and yet few researchers have analyzed these perspectives to learn what the horrifying events meant for women in particular and how they related to them. In Experience and Expression the authors take on this challenge providing the first book length gendered analysis of women and the Holocaust.

Women’s expression and experience of anger is affected in significant ways by cultural mores regarding anger. For instance, traditional socialization and taboos against women expressing anger have led to a culture where women are rewarded for hiding their anger or for expressing it indirectly. However, current theoretical psychology of women reveals that women were more facially expressive than men. More intense facial expressions.
