Smart goals are important to the success of any safety and health program. Unfortunately, many people make the mistake of focusing solely on the desired outcomes in the development of their goals. Goal setting is an essential part of life. We all need goals in order to help illuminate the road to our hopes and our dreams. They help to invoke a more visceral, tangible, and actionable path to what we desire in life. When we write out goals, they become more real. The smart approach applies to housekeeping goals just as to anything else. Goals must be specific, measurable, achievable, results-oriented, and time-specific. For example, clean the house is not a smart goal because it isn't specific or time-specific even being measurable or achievable is questionable because houses are big with.
