The text appears to be a mix of random content without any coherent structure. It seems to be a collection of sentences and phrases extracted from various sources, possibly related to technology and programming. Due to the lack of context and coherence, it is challenging to provide a meaningful summary or interpretation of the text.
This review was written three months after graduating from Tech Elevator's net bootcamp. I've been in my current position as a consultant software developer for two months, and now that the honeymoon period of a new position is over, I still wouldn't change a thing about the decisions I've made in regard to Tech Elevator.

Eclipse IoT Developer Survey 2019

April 19

Harry Fairhead

The Eclipse Foundation's IoT Working Group has released the results of its 2019 IoT developer survey, an annual exercise intended to deliver valuable insight into programming languages, platforms, infrastructure, and tools for building IoT solutions. Nothing new here for regular readers.

This post implements an idea that I saw on Brian Marick's blog and liked: a table of contents for a set of conference posts, coupled with cross-links as notes at the top of each entry. I've done a table of contents before for OOPSLA 2005, though sadly not for 2004 or 2006. But I like the addition of the link back from entries to the index.
