A thesis statement is a sentence or two that clearly states the argument you make in your paper. Two characteristics of thesis statements:
- They are debatable so they must be more than simple statements of fact. There must be some disagreement about the argument to allow for debate.
- They are narrow.

A topic that is too broad focuses on one important concept. This kind of search will find thousands of results for you to look through. These are examples of broad topics: leadership, cancer, health care. Narrow topics: A topic that is too narrow usually has many concepts or focuses on a specific geographic area or group.

For an example of topic sentences which shows how well they summarise the main strands of the essay’s argument see this bird’s eye view of an essay. I encourage you to use topic sentences – while they can be a challenge to write initially, with practice writing them will become second nature.

The subtopic of an essay is a topic that supports the main topic of the essay and helps to bolster its credibility. An example of a subtopic in an essay about transitioning to a new school might be difficulty making new friends or learning what each teacher expects. Essays with subtopics typically follow a standard format.
