A larger battery of preliteracy assessments that was administered to the children the PPVT-III and EVT were administered early in the battery. The PPVT-III and EVT each required approximately 15-20 min to administer.

The Peabody Picture Vocabulary Test (PPVT-III) and its counterpart, the Evaluation of Verbal Comprehension, were among the assessments administered. These tests are designed for children from ages 3 to 20 years and were selected for their reliability and validity in assessing vocabulary and language comprehension.

The PPVT-III was developed by Lloyd M. Dunn and Douglas M. Dunn. It has been widely used in clinical and educational settings to assess vocabulary size and receptive language skills. The PPVT-III is a standardized test that provides norms for various subgroups, including children with disabilities.

The evaluators used the PPVT-III to assess vocabulary skills. The PPVT-III is a 120-item test that presents pictures of objects, animals, people, and actions. The test requires the child to choose the picture that represents the word presented orally by the examiner. The PPVT-III is scored by calculating the number of correct responses, with higher scores indicating better vocabulary knowledge.

In addition to the PPVT-III, the evaluators administered the EVT, which is a supplement to the PPVT-III. The EVT includes additional items that assess specific areas of language and cognitive abilities. This combination of tests provides a comprehensive assessment of speech, language, and cognitive abilities.

The authors state that almost all retesting was done by the examiner who had administered the PPVT-III the first time. This method helps ensure consistency in the assessment process and reduces the potential for error.

Williams and Wang (1997) reported corrected coefficients between 91 to 94 with very little or no bias. This indicates that the PPVT-III is a reliable measure of vocabulary and language comprehension. The authors emphasize the importance of context-specific test validation, as a test may be valid for some uses and not others. For example, the PPVT-III may be a valid measure of receptive vocabulary but not a valid measure of overall cognitive ability or even overall language ability. It is important to keep in mind that test validation is context specific.
